Andropogon's

completely BIASED guide to PHILADELPHIA

"We tend to measure urban progress by each new building the city adds. By the end of my walk, it was clear that the spaces between our buildings do as much to shape our quality of life. They reveal how far we've really traveled."

- Inga Saffron, Inquirer Architectural Critic, Changing Skyline, September 22, 2012

welcome to philadelphia!

We at Andropogon encourage you to get out of that stuffy conference and explore our home town. The coffee is so much better out here! Our completely biased guide to Philadelphia offers you a totally non-comprehensive, somewhat self-serving list of our favorite places around town.

Getting Around: It's all good

Whether you set off on foot or rent a bike, you're sure to discover something amazing in the great streets, parks, and civic spaces of Philadelphia. We're confident that after a journey through our amazing urban fabric, which weaves together over 300 years of American architecture, you'll be sure to appreciate that landscape architect on your project team.

Philly is a great city for walking. Small streets and alleys, quirky local businesses, groups gathered around their favorite food truck, and pieces of history just about everywhere make it worth taking a closer look.

But Philly is also really fun for biking. With Indego and the free Citymapper app, you're ready to take to the streets on your very own clunky steed. It's easy to keep up with traffic on the small, busy streets. Or you could take off along the Schuylkill River Trail and get away from the cars.

We've also got subways, buses, and trolleys. A one-day $12 Independence Pass from SEPTZA will get you on any transit you like, all day long.

Escape is at Hand

You've been smiling and saying nice things to people all day long. Don't you think it's time to get out and taste some reality? If so, Philly's got your back. Whether it's an inky espresso, a donut fried while you wait, homemade noodles dripping with hot chili oil, or a whiz-bang vegan taco, we're here for you. We recommend that you cling tightly to this map and just get out there!
